

THE HISTORY

HOW IT WAS CONCEIVED

The Health Education Council wanted an attention-grabbing campaign to persuade men to seek advice on contraception. Dr Bill Jones, Director General of the Health Education Council said: "We want to make any ignorant or unthinking man stop and consider the suffering and problems he can cause through an unplanned pregnancy."

The poster confrontationally asked men, "Would you be more careful if it was you who got Pregnant?" At a time when sexual health was a taboo subject and contraception seen as a woman's concern the campaign was highly provocative and immediately famous. And as the campaign became famous so did the agency as Cramer Saatchi became the legendary Saatchi & Saatchi.

Fast forward a few years and the two brothers that founded Saatchi & Saatchi gave the agency a pub as a Christmas present, turning an unlikely building in the carpark of their offices in Charlotte Street into the heart of the company.

But what should it be called? An agency wide competition led to the pub being named The Pregnant Man in honour of that first piece of advertising created by Saatchi & Saatchi.

In January 2017, Saatchi & Saatchi moved into a new space in Chancery Lane and the opportunity to elevate this institution from a backyard boozier to a fully-fledged bar and restaurant was grabbed with both hands.
